Annual Testimonial Dinner
Honour Roll 2024

Growth Summit and Testimonial Dinner, April
11, 2024 | Metro Toronto Convention Centre

Come for the policy conversation, stay for the celebration.

Here's how you can be part of it.

ABOUT THE EVENTS

Canada Growth Summit 2024

Canada Growth Summit has become a must attend event on the country's economic policy calendar, where the Public Policy Forum (PPF) convenes the country's leading policymakers, experts, industry executives, and civil society to discuss the most pressing policy challenges.

Past Summits have covered Canada's increased role in a world looking for stable, secure, dependable allies; how to achieve a path to a net-zero economy, sustainable and inclusive growth, innovation and trade, the state of our airports in a post-pandemic world, and how to champion Canadian innovation in the 21st century. They have featured speakers such as Dominic Barton, Courtney Billington, Simon Kennedy, H.E. Nadia Theodore, Hon. François-Philippe Champagne, Hon. Chrystia Freeland, H.E. Ailish Campbell, Dr. Mike DeGagné and Deborah Flint.

36th Annual Testimonial Dinner Honour Roll

Each year, more than 1,200 leaders and senior executives from all sectors of society gather to pay tribute to four distinguished Canadians who have made outstanding contributions to public policy and good governance. PPF also acknowledges one emerging leader whose contribution personify leadership in the area of public policy and civic discourse via the Emerging Leader Award, and one journalist whose work provides insights into the policy-making process in Canada via the Hyman Solomon Award for Excellence in Public Policy Journalism.

Join us for an evening to honour Canada's most impactful public policy leaders and show your support for public policy excellence. To see past Testimonial Dinner Honourees, visit the PPF website here.

OVERARCHING THEME: Canada's Productivity Challenge

“Productivity isn't everything, but in the long run, it's almost everything.”

- PAUL KRUGMAN

Canada's productivity has fallen for 11 of the past 12 quarters, sinking all the way back to 2016 levels. As a result, Canada finds itself mired in a deepening growth, competitiveness and living standards hole.

Productivity is not some esoteric obsession of the world's economists. Low productivity – essentially the amount of GDP generated for each hour worked – hits Canadians directly in their pocketbooks in the form of weak wage growth. PPF Fellow and former British Columbia cabinet secretary Don Wright has calculated that in the three decades after the Second World War, the pace of real average weekly wage growth (2.5% a year) meant an average worker's pay doubled in just 27.6 years. For those entering the workforce in their late teens or early 20s, this doubling – after accounting for inflation – would have occurred before they turned 50. For obvious reasons, they had confidence they could pay off their mortgages and that their kids really would be better off. But from 1976 to today – a five-decade slice of history featuring nine prime ministers and 15 finance ministers – real average wages have grown at the miserly rate of less than one quarter of a percentage point a year. Now it takes 290 years – an Old Testament lifespan – to double your income. No wonder Canadians are increasingly pessimistic about prospects for their kids or that young adults feel economically anxious and excluded. The affordability crisis and the productivity crisis are overlapping phenomena. “Simply put, lower productivity almost always means lower living standards,” University of Calgary economist Trevor Tombe says.

Canada's poor showing stands out.. Globe and Mail columnist Tony Keller has shown that Canadians work more hours while producing fewer goods and services than compatriots in comparable nations. Canada's productivity now stands at 79% of the United States and so GDP per capita, unsurprisingly, is just 77%. It so happens that Finland's GDP per capita is also 77% of the U.S., but its productivity is 91% -- 12 percentage points higher than in Canada. How have the Finns benefitted from that extra productivity? By working fewer hours for the same standard of living. “Or to put it another way,” Keller says, “to keep Canada's economy level with Finland, the average Canadian is working 200 more hours. We're working harder. They're working smarter.”

Productivity, it turns out, is not left or right or pro-business or anti-workers. It is a universal good. That's especially so in a tight labour market. Labour and capital are not rivals; they tend to be mutually supporting in a modern economy. As Globe economics writer Andrew Coyne says: “the problem is not that we have too much labour, but too little capital – machinery and equipment – for labour to work with.”

That's because investment, the lifeblood of future growth, has also been trending down in recent years, including key categories such as machinery and equipment and intellectual property. In fact, the average Canadian worker now has less capital to work with than in 2014, according to the C.D. Howe Institute. It has calculated that the Canadian economy invested just $14,800 of new capital per worker in 2022 about half the level for American workers and a little under three-quarters of OECD countries other than the United States.

There's no single formula for reversing current productivity trends in Canada. Such classics as education and skills training, infrastructure development and getting things built in a timely manner have important roles to play. Certainly, creating conditions to encourage investment is critical. We need as a country to understand and address why we are falling behind on new machinery and equipment, intellectual property and the general adoption of leading-edge technologies.

The Public Policy Forum is concerned with the direction Canadian productivity is taking. We intend to devote our annual Canada Growth Summit on April 11, 2024 to understanding the problem and coming up with solutions that will enable Canadians to benefit from the universal economic good of productivity improvement. Canada's post-war economic plan, put forward in a 1945 White Paper on Employment and Income by Industry Minister C.D. Howe, put forward a highly successful policy framework that essentially amounted to a high productivity, high wages social contract. Canada once again needs a plan to migrate away from current lower-wage, lower-productivity trendlines. What will that take?

OVERARCHING THEME: Canada's Productivity Challenge

Canada Growth Summit 2024 tackles these questions and more. The Summit is a must-attend event on the country's economic policy calendar, where the Public Policy Forum (PPF) convenes the country's leading decision-makers, thought leaders and industry and civil society leaders to discuss how policy can make for more competitive Canada with high levels of economic participation and shared prosperity.

Grounding Questions

- How can we unlock productivity? How can we overcome obstacles to research and development, skills training, capital investment, innovation?
- Why is business investment stalled? Can labour market shortages serve as a spur to greater business investment in innovation?
- How can policy help get productivity and living standards back on track? What can we learn from past policies? What would a contemporary public policy agenda look like?
- What productivity opportunities and risks can be found in the changing global security landscape? How can these be used to bend the growth and competitiveness curve upward?
- In what sectors and in what parts of global value chains can Canada create and sustain competitive advantage and productivity improvement?

Elements of a Modern Productivity Agenda

The pre-summit Expert Table dinners were amazing, the Summit was very engaging and valuable, and the Testimonial Dinner was fantastic. PPF planned and executed an excellent event, we are very grateful for the partnership and for the opportunity to be so involved. We found it very valuable.

We are proud to have sponsored three of PPF's pre-Summit dinners over the past two years. These dinners are valuable: much smaller groups and the ability to really dig into issues with experts most of us would never be in front of. They afford wonderful and important opportunities for our guests and others, who are participating in the Growth Summit and Annual Testimonial Dinner. They also allow us to show off our space and our talent.

+ ADDITIONAL SPONSORSHIP OPPORTUNITIES | 36th ANNUAL TESTIMONIAL DINNER

WONK Magazine	PPF plans to produce a 68-page glossy magazine called WONK to amplify the exciting policy work going on within our think tank, celebrate Testimonial Dinner award winners and provide a platform for sponsorship opportunities. This beautiful, compelling magazine, written by the finest writers in the country, will include portraits of our Testimonial Dinner honourees and Q & As with leading thinkers, as well as substantive pieces of journalism about topics of deep interest to PPF, including health-care resiliency and life sciences; sustainable energy transition; democracy and good governance; and the social and economic determinants of long-term inclusive growth. The magazine will be given to Testimonial Dinner attendees — more than 1,200 leaders and policymakers — as well as all 250 PPF member organizations. It will also be distributed at subsequent PPF convenings and events.	$15,000-$75,000
VIP Honourees Reception Sponsor	Show your support for the event's Honourees and public policy leadership through this sponsorship opportunity. Receive premium brand exposure in the room and across the Honourees Hall of Fame corridor, as well as a short speaking opportunity, while getting to connect with Canada's top public policy influencers. The VIP Honourees' reception takes place prior to the Testimonial Dinner. Attendees include Honourees, their guests, sponsoring partners, special guests, and senior-level public servants and executives. This exclusive, invitation-only event will be happening in a private room while the general reception happens in the foyer and sets the tone of the evening for the illustrious guests.	$50,000
General Reception & Dessert Bar Sponsor	The General Reception and Dessert Bar is an opportunity for all Testimonial Dinner guests to connect before and after the evening's dinner and celebrations, as they arrive, mingle and network in the foyer area, adjacent to the dinner ballroom. Receive premium exposure with your organization's branding clearly displayed across the reception and dessert bar space throughout the evening. Unique opportunities include your brand featured in the step-and-repeat photo zone and logo centrally showcased in the event's Graphic Recording . Both opportunities provide your organization with prominent and continued association with PPF's renowned Testimonial Dinner.	$30,000
